Are you happy for us to email this information? (emails will be no more frequent than two per month) YES / NO

Please use the space below to write a brief biographical note for suggested use on the book cover/jacket. You may wish to list present and previous appointments, published works and other achievements. Please try to use no more than 50 words.

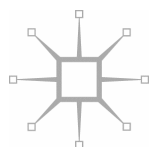

2 THE BOOK

- a. One line description – please write a description of your book suitable for short catalogue entries summing up its scope and theme succinctly.

- b. Please list the key selling points of your book, using individual bullet points. These could include topicality, new research data, an original theory, exceptional illustrations, unusual structure, etc.

- c. If the book is a new edition, please detail what changes you have made to update it (e.g. rewritten sections, new material, new illustrations, appeal to a wider market, etc.).

- d. Catalogue blurb – if we haven't already agreed a catalogue blurb with you, please write a short description of your book using no more than 80 words. It should give a lively indication of the content and appeal of the book and should encourage the reader to want to know more. As it may be read by both specialists and non-specialists, clear and simple English is best.

5. INSPECTION COPIES

Is your book a paperback textbook that you would expect to see highlighted as a recommended purchase on student reading lists? YES / NO

If YES – please suggest the names and contact details of up to 10 people who you think are likely to advise their students to purchase your book. Please include the name of the course or module on which they teach. We will send these people a free lecturer's copy and ask for their feedback on a questionnaire.

Please note, We only send copies of our books to individual academics where there is a strong likelihood of a book being adopted as a core textbook on a course. The high price and specialised nature of monographs means that they are less likely to be adopted as a core text, and as such we do not usually send copies of monographs to individual academics. If your book is a hardback monograph, this section of the form will not be processed.

6. PROMOTIONAL OPPORTUNITIES

- a. Marketing opportunities include:
- We can look into contacting any associations, companies, conference organisers or personal contacts who you think likely to buy multiple copies of your book to pass on to their members, delegates or employees.
 - If you maintain a blog, we can link this to your book's catalogue page and list it in our list of author blogs. If you are interested in setting up a blog, we can help you with this.
 - If you have access to (and permission to use) any email lists, list-servs or online discussion groups, we can look into sending details of your book.
 - If you are attending any conferences, or planning a book launch, then we can provide you flyers offering your book at a discount to take along.

If you wish to find out more about or provide any information on the above opportunities, please email authors@palgrave.com

- b. Please list the ten publications or websites you think most likely to review your book (suggestions for specialist journals, newsletters, websites or blogs are most useful). If you have personal contacts at relevant publications, please provide details, otherwise please simply indicate the name of the publication and the publisher or website address for online media. Please note that we may not send out review copies to all the publications you suggest, particularly if your suggestions are national newspapers since we reserve the right to restrict the number of publicity copies sent to the most mainstream popular press (experience has shown that this generates better results).

Please only include journals based outside North America. Our US office sends review copies to journals in North America, and target major journals in each field. If they require any further suggestions, we will contact you.

Many thanks for completing this form. If you have any other suggestions regarding sales and marketing opportunities, for example further lists of relevant lecturers and modules, please append to this form, discuss with your editor or email authors@palgrave.com.
